A pattern of injustices dressed up as “choice” ...

1. The rhetoric of choice hides the reality of coercion.
2. Abortion is often someone else’s “choice.” 64% of American women who have had abortions felt pressured by others.¹
3. Pressure is significant. Her “choices” may involve loss of home, family or essential support, or abuse that can escalate to violence.² Homicide is the leading killer of pregnant women.³
4. Coercion can take many forms, including undisclosed, misleading or false information about fetal development and alternatives.⁴
5. Even though the majority felt rushed and uncertain, 67% received no counseling; 79% were not told about alternatives.¹
6. Abortion is often a woman’s last choice, but her abuser’s first choice.² Teens face an especially high risk for coercion.⁵
7. Many Americans who pushed family or friends to abort were also deceived – by experts, authorities or even pastors – about fetal development, alternatives and risks.⁴,⁶
8. The overall death rate of women rises 3.5 times after an abortion.⁷ Suicide rates are 6 times higher after an abortion.⁸
9. 65% report symptoms of Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder they attribute to their abortions.¹
10. “We were maiming at least one woman a month.” – Carol Everett, former abortion clinic operator

It wasn’t safe. It wasn’t fair. It wasn’t about “choice.”

Learn more about abortion’s injustice and injury to women: TheUnChoice.com

Citations
2. See the special report, Forced Abortion in America at www.theunchoice.com/Coerced.htm.